PERMIT ISSUED FOR NEW SCHOOL

Cost of Three Buildings on Von Versen Avenue Will Be $275,000.

Permits were issued by the Building Commissioner yesterday for the erection of the new Manual Training School, Smith Academy and shop building on Von Versen avenue, west of Union avenue. The cost of the three buildings, according to the statement made to the Building Comsioner, will be $27,000. The breaking of ground for the Manual Training School building took place Monday afternoon following impressive exercises participated in by Calvin M. Woodward, dean of Washington University, and members of the faculty and students. It is intended to have the buildings ready for occupancy at the beginning of the next school year in September.

The buildings will occupy a site 600x600 cer immediately south of Windermere The buildings will occupy a site 600590 feet immediately south of Windermere place and west of the Blossom homestead property. The buildings will have a south frontinge, the Smith Academy occupying the west and the Manual Training School the east portions of the ground. The shops of the training school are to be located just north of the school. Inclosed corridors will connect the three buildings, giving to a certain extent the effect of a single structure.

ridors will connect the three buildings, giving to a certain extent the effect of a single structure.

The buildings were designed by Mauran, Russell & Garden, the architects, and embody many new and improved features for school purposes. Calvin M. Woodward, dean of Washington University, and Charles P. Curd, principal of Smith Academy, both devoted much time to a study of arrangement of the buildings toward making them a model of their king in this country. Exterior beauty and safety, however, were not neglected. An attractive combination of gray Bedford stone and mottled brick will be used in the construction, while the general use of thing and concrete will make the interiors practically fireproof. The most improved heating and concrete will make the interiors practically fireproof. The most improved heating and eventilating system will be followed throughout.

Buth main buildings will be four stories high, the Smith Academy occupying a ground area 199x3 and the training school 199x9 feet, each conforming with the other in outside design. The basement floor of each will be divided into use for symmasium, lockers and restaurant for students. A commodious auditorium will be a part of each building, for use at commencement and other exercises. The remainder of the three under floors are to be devoted to class nuroses.

The Manual Training School shop building is especially designed for such purposes, and will be outsided with all modern ambiances for instruction in that line. An overhead system of skylights will afford all natural light for such work. The building is to be one story in height and will occury 199x56 feet.
